Posted by David Lee on Mon, 29 Dec 2008 20:56:07 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Thanks for the response. Plain text passwords was a test setting that did not get reset, and the smiley   in the OP was intended to convey that was bad practice. I don't understand how the upgrade caused it, but have no other explanation of how it could have happened, so I guess it can only be recorded as finger trouble.
 My knowledge of which variables control RADICORE is limited, so I am not surprised that there was better ways to sort it out. Thinking security, I realised that my method requires quite a lot of unusual privileges, so was unlikely to be a security hazard on a well configured system.