If the FROM clause was being truncated it would result in a invalid SQL statement, and therefore an SQL error. What you have is a DOM error, which would indicate to me that the error was produced by the DOM extension while writing to the XML document. I have seen this in the past when the data array being added to the XML document contains an invalid character in either the array key or the array value. A blank key will also produce an error.

When an error occurs Radicore will display a summary of the details on the screen, but more complete details can be found in file errorlog.html - can you look there to see what it says?
