By having the same document root for both domains you can share a single installation of the Radicore files in your file system. Both of your subsystems could also reside under the same document root. If you had a single set of database for both domains then both domains would be visible in the menu tabs and would therefore be accessible. If you had a separate set of databases for each domain, by modifying the config.inc file as I explained previously, then each domain would have its own menu database and could only access the subsystem(s) which were loaded into that copy of the menu database.
