I understand that.

But how to solve the following problem:

Multiple accounts can be created in an application by the site administrator.
Each account has an "account admin" who can create account users.
This means that the creation of new users can be shifted to the account managers.

If I understood correctly, Radicore is designed so that all administration is carried out by designated administrators. This would mean that creating or changing a user in a specific account can only be carried out by the overall system administrator. I would like to have an "account admin" carry out these tasks by only allowing certain roles to be selected. The account admin is allowed to create as many users as previously determined by the overall system administrator.

I hope I explained the situation correctly.
